FIRST CALL
1917

2nd letter sent.

MANY things have happened up here in St. Paul. For one thing, we have organized the 351st Regimental Association, and we want each of you to join up. We had a big get-together and dinner on November 10, at the Saint Paul Hotel. Over two hundred of the old outfit were present. We elected officers, and are already laying plans for our big blow-out for 1920.

B

Anthony Froehlingsdorf, the old Sergeant-Major, was made president, and Paul F. Schlick, former Signal Officer, is the Secretary, and the man to write to. He lives at 825 Goodrich Ave., St. Paul, Minn.

I'm glad you have your history. It was a much bigger job than I had figured on, and I'm glad my worries are finis.

Foreword

IN this—the story of the 351st Infantry—none but points and facts that relate to the regiment as a whole have been emphasized. Individuals of the regiment who were at St. Mihiel, in the Aisne, Argonne and other actions have their own story to tell. This story is supported by different orders affecting the regiment and is the result of two years of labor. It is presented, long after each of us have answered “here” to the last roll, and have bade good-bye to things military. Pride of organization causes us to look back to the 351st with the one thought—“one of the best the army produced.” We know this work will make many a pleasant evening more pleasant, and will hold together those memories, which as time hurries on, become more cherished.

HEADQUARTERS COMPANY

Headquarters Company

TO recount that which has been done by Headquarters Company during its existence would be infringing on the good nature of the publishers of this book—it would take a book in itself. However, it will not be amiss for those of us who have been with the company since its inception to express a feeling of gratitude for our good fortune in being thrown together with a body of men such as has made up this organization. All men of the company are particularly fortunate in having as companions the other “fellows” in the company.

Made up, as it is, of several units, each with a separate and distinct duty, the Headquarters Company is one upon which a bulk of duties unknown to the rifle company falls. The condition of the communications, barracks and other duties that fall to the Pioneers, Signalmen, Band, Trench Mortars, One Pounders and Headquarters platoons depends upon a well-organized company as a whole, containing an enthusiastic body of men. We can say that the Headquarters Company was “there” in every sense of the word, and when it came to making a defunct lighting system blossom forth, a more defunct steam roller make roads, building hangars and barracks, and boosting morale with lively music, we know that the spirit that made the 351st what it was was in the bottom of every man’s heart, and when it came to proving which platoon of one pounders and trench mortars was the best the 351st Headquarters Company took its place with the rest of the regiment.

We are out of the service. Let us do our work as wearers of the red chevron with the same spirit and optimism as we did when we were “packing” holnails and mud. Let us not forget those men who did not return with us.

As a closing word, allow us to wish you well and to admonish each of you to be as good a man to yourself as you were to Headquarters Company.

OFFICERS OF HEADQUARTERS COMPANY.

SUPPLY COMPANY

Supply Company

THE Supply Company, 351st Infantry originated at Camp Dodge, Iowa, September, 1917. Lieutenant Grant was in command of the Supply Company for about a month until Capt. Charles O. Bunner took command.

Orders for the transfer of the Division to overseas service came and the company started its long journey on the eighth day of August, 1918. The men were all very eager for the trip and the first stop of importance was Camp Mills, New York. The company saw a great deal of work at this embarkation point equipping the men of the regiment for overseas. The regiment left on the sixteenth day of August and the Supply Company made its trip on an English vessel by the name of Saxon. The general opinion is that the ship was built in the time of the early Saxons and the extraordinary accommodations on the boat seemed to prove this fact.

During the engagement of the regiment on the Alsace-Haute front the Supply Company was located in Manspach a little German village in the rear of the lines.

While the company was located in the town of Manspach many things happened that are amusing to mention. Among the stories is one told of the old German woman in the "orderly" room. The orderly room of the company was located in this woman's home. The usual rush of Americans taking quarters was too much for the old woman. She had an old sewing machine handed down from the time of the "Ark" and was very proud of it. When morning came Sergeant Harry Stiff, who knew a little German, walked into the room and the following conversation ensued: "Gute Morgan, Gross-Mutter, you have a fine machine." The old lady answered with "It's a good machine." Then in quick English, too much for the old lady, Harry came out with "It's a H—H of a machine."

A story is told about Wagoner Ritchie driving almost into the German front lines before receiving orders to return. The officer told him to back around and double quick out of the place and Ritchie answered, "Sir, I have my orders to walk my team." About this time the officer became highly excited and Ritchie disobeyed the orders on walking animals.

The "Grenade" sergeant came into the limelight while the company was stationed at this place. Raymond Costigan, hailing from Davenport, Iowa, earned this fake title and it remained with him ever after. Raymond handled the ammunition and pyrotechnics with the rest of this kind of work and believe all, he was some handler.

Regimental Supply Sergeant Harry E. Bostrom also from St. Paul had his first experience of warfare at this point. Sergeant Bostrom was in charge of supplies at the station before the town of Manspach and was late in arriving in the new town. He came to the organization in the middle of the night and upon arrival was obliged to report to regimental headquarters when he arrived at the company. One of the sergeants told him it would be necessary to go fully armed and to carry a gas mask at alert position. Harry carried out the orders and never fell for any joke being played on him. His mind was somewhat relieved when he made the trip of about one hundred years in the dark not finding any Germans lurking behind the trees. From the talk he understood he had a trip up into the front lines of a mile or so.

Many stories are told of Sergeant Gordon Wallace acting as supply sergeant for the 1st Battalion. In the awarding of D. S. C.'s Gordon should not be forgotten. He tells of the time that the bullets were so thick the men could not sleep in the same place two nights in a row. He also claims that they were obliged to move out of one place after a shell had torn off the corner of the shack and in another instant the "bunks" were actually destroyed by shell fire. Gordon got quite tired of the army game so left the company after the war was over and will be home to greet the boys when they return.

During the stay in Manspach "trench equipment" came in for the men at the front and every truck brought in quartermaster, signal and ordnance property. A good deal of this equipment was strange to the men handling it, but nevertheless was rushed to the front as fast as received. Everything from pigeon equipment to machine guns and rolling kitchens came along and the experience was interesting as well as an entirely new one for all concerned.

After the signing of the armistice the company was returned to the Gondrecourt area, but before coming into this area was in reserve and ready for action in the Toul sector. The Supply Company came into the little town of Baudignecourt on the thirtieth of November and this little place has furnished the excitement for the company for the last five months.

A great percentage of the men in the Supply Company come from the states of Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri.

MACHINE GUN COMPANY

Machine Gun Company

IT would be rather singular if every captain in this old regiment did not refer to his company as the company upon which the real reputation of the regiment was based. Here in the Machine Gun Company I feel, as every one of the officers and men feel, that we have one of the greatest organizations ever perfected, both as a fighting unit and as a "maneuver" unit, for who can ever forget the rain, the mud and the cold of those bleak days along the Orain? Yet it was with a song on our lips and a grin for the inspectors that we went through those days. Among the machine gunners the days were always happy, from the Dodge days through the man-killing hikes, days at the front and the period of waiting here on these Meuse hills. Our morale has been and is 100 per cent and now that we're going home our enthusiasm is unbounded.

Yet at this time and in days to come we will look back and the thoughts of our own machine gunners who are going to watch over these hills, long after we've discarded the O. D., will bring back memories of those great fellows whose adventure has been greater than ours. We honor our dead.

I know that the men of this company are going to find the bigger, the greater in life; they are bigger men because they have served and mingled with men. I wish each of you all that's happy in life.

Company "A"

A LONG with the regiment, Company "A" came into being in September, 1917. A democratic crowd whose principal business was that of soldiering. From the first day, until that day when the morning brought the sights of France, every hour was crammed with work which, as we look back at it now, was much more pleasant than at the time of performance. Company "A" did its hitch in the lines with the rest of the regiment, it is proud of its record, and of its cheerfulness through the trying days of waiting.

It is with pride that I look back at Company "A" and realizing that but a few days mark that time until we all get home again, I want to say that I wish you well; I know that the future holds big things in store for each of you.

351 ST. INFANTRY

Company "B"

IT was in the beginning of things. Captain Hay and Lieutenants Chinn, Dodsley, Carris, Berg, McCandless and Hugh O'Neill arrived at Camp Dodge early in September, 1917, and were assigned to the 351st Infantry and Company "B."

After a brief period which was occupied in the skeletonization, in officer personnel, of the various organizations in the Division, there arrived from various points on the compass numerous non-commissioned officers whose function was to assist the various commanders in initiating the preliminary steps of organization. The efficiency with which these non-commissioned officers discharged their duties and labored in the development of eager and timid "civies" in the period of military training which followed will always furnish relishing thought to the reminiscent, from the grim, unrelenting and austere officer, down to the then temerous military fledgling, who now is thoroughly developed and whose precise manner and alert bearing mark him as a veteran.

It came to pass that the new order of things wrought great and wondrous changes. Straw hats established headquarters in the rubbish heap; stand-up white linen collars were thwarted, scorned and abolished; neckties, the delicate and the glaring, were ostracized; white shirts, of delicate design and attractive weave, were sent on leave of absence; cuff links passed away; silk socks came to the parting of the ways; English shoes met their Waterloo; and the civie-suit was torn from its possessor and pierced with more than three and twenty wounds. This was the most unkindest cut of all. Quel revolution! What a sad demise for the foppery so long enjoyed! And the men, deprived of their habitual adornment, emerged in the new life in khaki and olive drab, round toed shoes and big service hats. Such was the change and none regrets it.

And then came the great working of miracles and men's habits were changed and newly molded. Stampedes to "get on the line" followed the blasting of notes on an instrument hitherto associated with the selling of fish, for reveille was sounding, and the bugle, responding to the demands of its heartless and relentless master, was assassinating the peace of men.

The only pleasing notes to the ears of the men of Company "B" upon returning from a day's grilling by Captain Hay and his barbarian associates, Sergeants Lowther, Jacobs, Farrell and Miller were the call for "slum."

Weeks of the hardest work came on. Men were being rounded into shape, even if it must be accredited to those barbarians. A host of new non-commissioned officers was made. But in November, 1917, the men were all lost to the regiment and only the barbarian non-commissioned officers remained behind. They were all paid for the grief they caused by intimate association, through the winter months, with coal and ash details and kitchen police work at the officer's mess.

The company was re-filled in February, 1918, with new men from Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Illinois.

For a second time the company lost most of its enlisted personnel in April, 1918. April, May, June and July, witnessed the hardest training known to Camp Dodge and the entire 88th Division. A keen historian has asked if some one ever counted the rounds of ammunition fired by the men on the rifle range at Camp Dodge and sad though it be to relate his relatives are still in mourning.

The men, in July, 1918, were nearly overtrained and were desperate to go overseas. And the opportunity came. On August 6th the regiment left Camp Dodge for Camp Mills, N. Y. After a stay of one week at that station the company embarked, on August 15, 1918, on the good ship Saxon, for abroad. The trip was uneventful and a landing was made at Liverpool, England, on August 28th. The company left immediately for Camp Stoney Castle, in Aldershot, which will be long remembered for its — meals. The stay at this station was followed by a railroad journey to Southampton and across the Channel to Cherbourg, France, in an English tub.

The company had undergone some changes and Lieutenants Chinn, Ash, Berg and O'Neill remained in America. Lieutenant Davis had joined the company in January and Lieutenant Swisher in December. This constituted the changed officer personnel, with an officer candidate, Sergeant O'Neill, in addition.

Space does not permit an elaboration of the pleasurable period spent with the delightful French inhabitants at Flavigny, Cote d'Or. From Flavigny we proceeded on September 13, 1918, to Coisevaux Haute Saone, where we were located from September 15, 1918 to October 5, 1918. At this small French village the company received its hardest blows. Spanish Influenza reaped a harvest of destruction. One month in the trenches followed and the change of locality and the life in the trenches, paradoxical though it may seem, saw the men through the entire period of our stay in the front lines without illness.

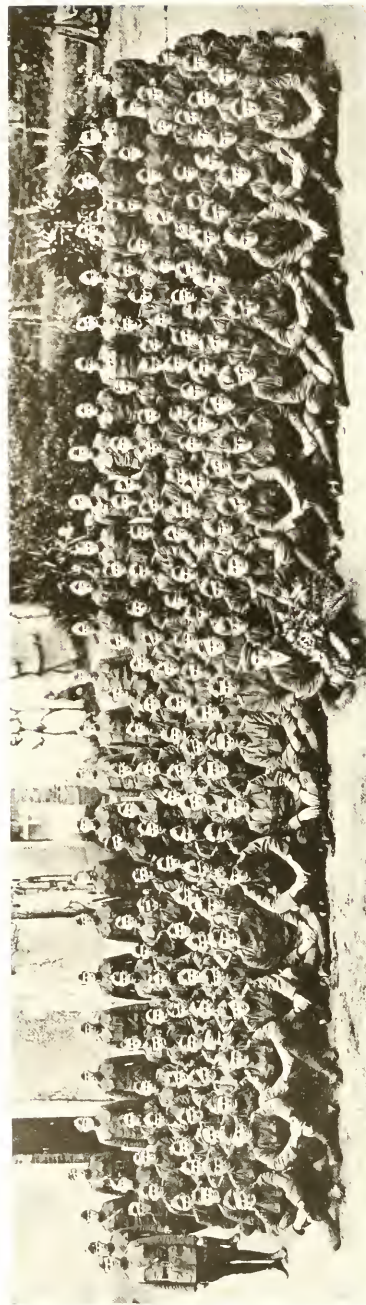

From the trenches we proceeded to Lutran, Sermamgany, Villey St. Etienne, Pagny-sur-Meuse, Rigny St. Martin and Houdehaincourt.

At Houdehaincourt, in the Gondrecourt area, where the company arrived on December 1, 1918, the company has been more comfortably situated than at any other time or place since our arrival in France.

On April 25, 1919, Captain Hay was transferred to the 1st Division and it happened just one week before we started on our homeward journey. He has always been regarded by the men as a kind and generous commander, whose thought has ever been of his men, the guardian of their military adventures, the devoted friend of each man and it is fitting that this history record the sincerest appreciation of his officers and his men, their high regard and attachment and their best wishes for a happy and most successful future.

1ST CAVALRY BAND

Company "C"

THE pride that any organization commander takes in his command seems to justify the assumption that his individual command is the best one of that nature in existence and in this respect it affords me the most pleasant retrospection to review my experiences as company commander of Company "C," 351st Infantry, both in association with the officers and enlisted personnel of the company.

Briefly recalling the various events in connection with our progress we must first consider the strenuous days back at Camp Dodge when we were trying to organize and build the nucleus of a fighting machine, then our short journey to Camp Mills, N. Y., the pleasant voyage across the sea, our arrival at Liverpool and brief stay in England, the last lap of our journey by water across the Channel and arrival in France, closely followed by the trying days at Flavigny and Coisevaux where we attempted to perfect our organization while laboring under the most adverse conditions. The climax was finally attained when the company took over a sector of the front line at Haute-Alsace; and the period of maneuvering and "watchful waiting" at Houdelaincourt, after the signing of the armistice, can well be termed the anti-climax.

Through all these various stages in our company's existence it was certainly a pleasure and a source of satisfaction and assurance to work with officers and men who showed the determination, the fortitude, the courage and loyalty manifested by the members of this company.

But as no great thing is achieved without a price, even so our attempt to win for our country and mankind an enduring peace has witnessed the extraction of a toll by the Grim Reaper. On the rolls of the gallant procession of those who offered their all and had their gift accepted, we find inscribed the names of eleven former members of this company. It would be but selfish to entirely lose ourselves in the joy and happiness occasioned by our return to home and friends and hastily erase from our memory all recollection of those who sleep beneath the soil of France.

Undoubtedly you will all have returned to your normal pursuits long before this history is published, but regardless of that fact, I admonish you to set honor before ease, to be as conscientious in your work, to be as true to yourself and country as you were loyal to "C" Company, and I predict that the future will be very alluring for you.

That your every venture in civil life will be crowned with success and that life metes out to each of you more than your proportionate share of happiness and contentment is the sincere wish of your company commander.

Company "D"

SOMEWHERE in Dodge the company with lots of "pep and vinegar" was formed. Officially it was known as "D" Company. Right up the ladder it climbed and registered for a permanent seat on the top rung thereof, which it has occupied ever since. A better company of men never existed, although it is admitted that this regiment is made up of just such companies. The "go-get-'em" spirit of the company has ever prevailed; the victors in the first regimental field meet, the honor company in the first ceremony of the escort of colors, such things as these might well be expected of the "cockiest" company of them all and they never had it taken out of them.

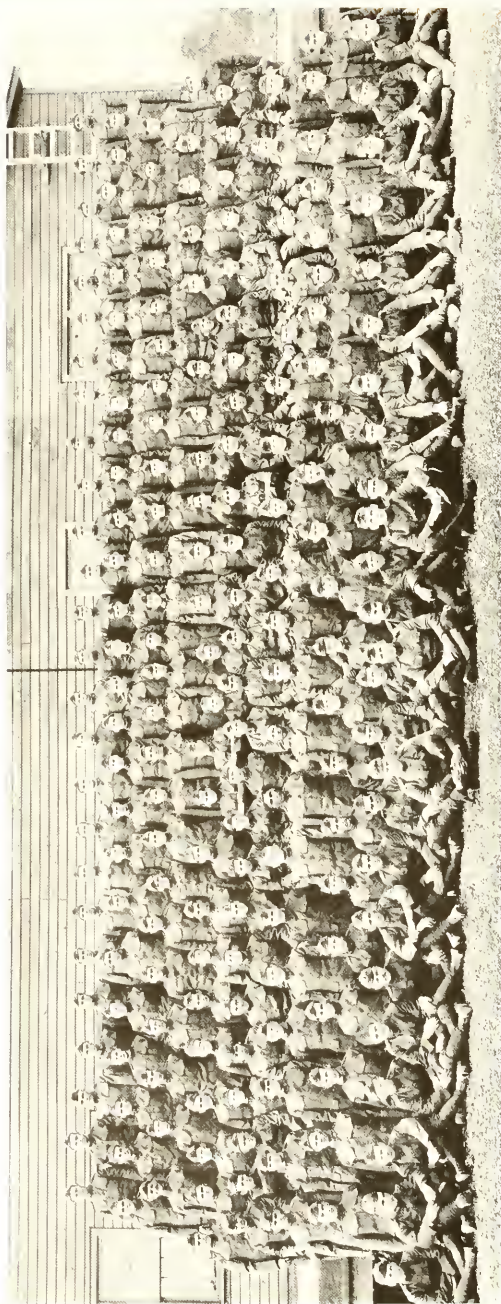

Every man in it has always been for "D" Company; only one political party ever existed in "D" Company and that was the one for the company. We lost as many men as any by transfers, they disliked to leave us no more than we did to see them go, but the remainder never said "Fail." We always came back stronger than ever.

We came to France to do our best and did it; we saw that any better could not be done; we conquered everything, including the "flu," except that strong desire now that we want to go right back to the states.

And here's to "D" Company, always the company of the regiment, may its men always be the men for they were the "D" men.

EVERY man in that picture is a friend of every other man there and we are proud of it. A more loyal company a captain never had and it is with pleasure and pride that I refer to that bunch of men as "my company." My company did things. More things than they were merely told. They had hearts of iron through those days when the going was hard and the packs were heavy; through those days in a slimy rat-infested trench; through the days of maneuvering over these hills to the time when we went to Liffolle-Grand to do our convoy duty. And now going home again brings thoughts of anything but those military. The big day is coming. As we go out, each our own way, let us keep each other in mind.

To each of you, I extend my hand. I wish you well. And the latch key is always out.

I HAVE but a word. As far as history of the company is concerned, this book will cover that.

WE are all human. We share the same sorrows and joys, the same pain—and we all have the same pride of organization that is my own when I think of Company "G." I'll remember with pride your stout-heartedness through those hikes and subsequent days in the line; your good nature in cold, wet billets; your enthusiasm on convoy duty and your enthusiastic response to every call.

I know that the future holds big things for you. I wish you well.

II. ANFANG

Company "H"

COMPANY "H" was organized in September, 1917, by Captain F. C. Legg and Lieutenants Wall, Painter, Lynch and Benolken, with the assistance of Sergeant Stueger and Sergeant Gravelle. Both of these sergeants were from the regular army and their experience proved to be invaluable in getting the company organized. Only those who took an active part in the actual organization can appreciate the difficulties that confronted those who attempted to make an army out of civilians. A large share of the credit for the success is due to the untiring efforts of the officers and men who had had experience in the regular army. Of the above officers and men only Captain Legg and Sergeant Gravelle are now with the company. The other officers with the company, Lieutenants Cerney, McClintock, Perry, Cook and Reinertson, were assigned later and missed the work and worry connected with the organization.

The first drafted men to come into the company arrived in a small increment that reached Camp Dodge on September 5th, a still larger group arrived later in the month. These men were all trained for duty overseas and just at the time all were prepared to go, they were transferred to other Divisions scheduled to go earlier. A few of the men in the persons of Sergeants Mygind, Russell, Buzay, Bergeson, Angell, Lamaster and Lundstrom, Corporal Mandell and Cooks Gilbertson and Tofte, remained. These men formed the nucleus for the present company and have been of great service in training the new men as they came in and in the organization of the present company. They are veterans of the long training period that ended in August, 1918, when the company started overseas.

The long journey was a series of stops in which each stop was just long enough to unpack, repack and then move. There were a few days in Camp Mills, two weeks on the "Scotian," a few days at Camp Stoney Castle, England, a few more days in a rest camp at Cherbourg and then the move to Pouilliny, Cote d'Or, France, where training was resumed. The move to Pouilliny will long be remembered as the first ride that many had enjoyed in a box car. All cars were marked 40 Hommes or 8 Chevaux. It was a disappointment to learn that the men were the Hommes and not the Chevaux. The next move was to Champney where it rained for three weeks, without interruption.

After leaving Champney the company moved to Romagny, from there to Fulleren and then up into the lines. It relieved Company "F" of this regiment in the Glickerwald section of the Fulleren sector of the Haute-Alsace line. This was held in conjunction with the 15th Company of the 4th Zouaves. These were later withdrawn and that section was held by the company.

Company headquarters were established at P. C. Aquitaine. The kitchen was quite near it and the food was brought up to the men in the lines by carrying details. Privates Lehman and Ferrara, with the assistance of a small burro, kept the company supplied with excellent water from a natural spring. The activities were limited to the nightly patrols sent out. Company "H" was relieved by Company "A" of the 352nd Regiment.

The next move was back to Romagny, from there the longest "hike" in the history of the company was made to Chaux, where the company rested and drilled for two weeks. A march was then made to Belfort where it entrained for one of the more active sectors of the line. The armistice went into effect while the company was on the train and the destination was changed to Francheville. After drilling in the mud at the cross roads for three weeks a march of two days was made to Houdelaincourt. Here the company was rejoined by Captain Legg after a two months' absence. The balance of the year was spent in maneuvering.

On January 9th the company moved by truck to Liffolle-Grand where three months of the most interesting time in the army were spent on convoy duty. All had at least one opportunity to go up to Germany in a box car. On those trips riding in a box car was not so unpleasant as other trips. Ten men, one officer with a stove and plenty of rations made a two-day trip to Coblenz, where they were allowed time to rest and see the country. A trip up the Rhine was also provided.

April 21st "H" Company returned to Houdelaincourt. Officers and men were glad to renew their acquaintance throughout the regiment. The promise of an early return to the United States and "Home" put new spirit into all the necessary tasks in preparation for that event.

In after years, when the comforts of home have become daily routine, the friendships of a year or more of service will still endure and the experiences of that year will be the most treasured of memories.

Company "I"

COMPANY "I" 351st Infantry left Camp Dodge, Iowa, August 7, 1919, with the company strength of 234 men and arrived at Camp Mills, N. Y. August 10th, leaving there for overseas duty August 15th. We arrived at Liverpool, England, August 28th. We remained in England for seven days sailing from Southampton for Cherbourg, France on September 5th. From Cherbourg we entrained for a station near Mussy le Fosse remaining at Mussy for a period of five days. Our next stop was at Byans near Hericourt where we trained intensively for three weeks. From Byans we went to the trenches on the front in Alsace, while here we occupied the Schonholz sector for a period of twelve days. The first enemy raid came on October 18th but was successively repelled with the loss on our part of one man killed, Private Edgar L. McCord and Private Harley J. Miller wounded. After a rest of eight days at Hagenbach we marched to Evette, a distance of twenty-three miles. This is said to be the longest march ever made by a company in our regiment in a single day. We left Evette November 10th marching to Bel-fort where we entrained for the big front. On November 28th we left Jaillon for Houdelain-court making a three-day march. The remainder of the winter was passed at Houdelain-court where the time was spent in drilling and terrain movements.

Company "K"

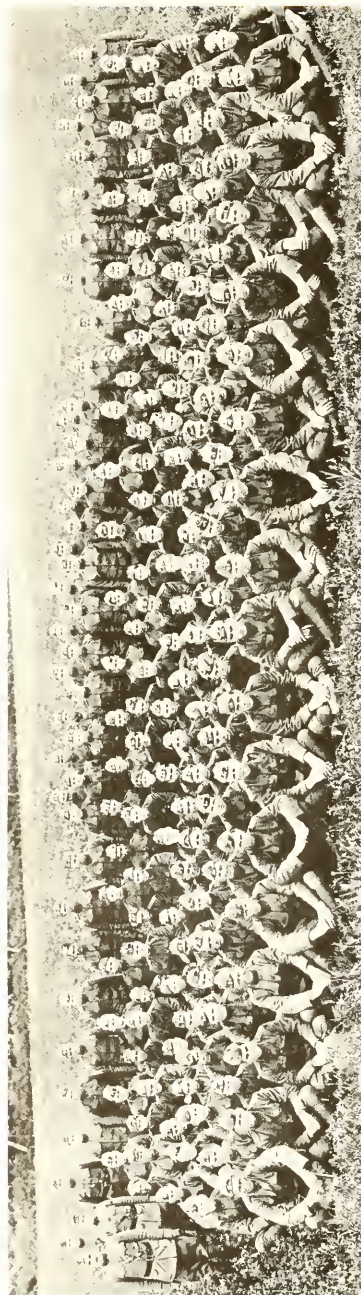

"K" Company of the 351st Infantry was organized at Camp Dodge, Iowa, September 5, 1917. The company with a roster of 238 enlisted men and four officers entrained at Camp Dodge, August 7, 1918, en route to Camp Mills, Long Island where it arrived August 10, 1918. The company boarded the ship Ulysses and set sail the following day for Liverpool, England. No time was lost after arrival in boarding trains and the company was taken to the Rest Camp Cowshott. On the night of September 5th a transport was boarded and the English Channel was crossed to Cherbourg, France. The company marched to the Rest Camp Manche. On September 7th the company entrained at Cherbourg and went to Pouillinau, Cote d'Or, where it detrained September 9th and marched to Massigny. The company remained here until it entrained at Les Laumes, Cote d'Or for Hericourt. It was billeted at Byans when it began its march to the trenches arriving at Dannemarie, Alsace.

The company moved into the trenches where it remained for a week when it withdrew to Hagenbach. It remained at Hagenbach a week when it again went into the trenches. It was then withdrawn to Camp Norman. It left Camp Norman and marched to Evette, Belfort. It entrained at Belfort detraining at La Cumijs. It marched to Jaillon where it was billeted until November 29th.

On the morning of November 29th the company began a three-day march to Houde-laincourt, Meuse, where it arrived December 1st. Winter was spent at this place and the time was taken up by military maneuvers and close order drill.

Company "L"

PRIDE and humor have been the two great assets of the American soldier in France. Pride in his manhood, the righteousness of his cause and in his personal courage, has made him invincible in battle. Humor has enabled him to undergo with fortitude the hardships to which the climate of sunny France and the quartermaster corps have subjected him.

"L" Company typifies the American soldier in the possession of these qualities. Pride of organization has made the 351st what it is and pride of company has made "L" Company what it has constantly believed itself to be from the days of Camp Dodge, when it lead the regiment in bayonet fighting, to the days of Houdelaincourt, when it won the platoon championship of the Division. Pride held these men at their posts during their first bombardment, in spite of the temptation of the friendly dugout; and pride brought them through the famous man-killing marches under packs that are destined to become fabulous in the ears of generations to come.

But it is the quality of humor which unites with pride and produces the real American. Humor has softened the bite of the trench rat and soothed the itch of the playful "cootie." Only humor kept him going in "dark December" that period which has been entered in history under the various alliterative titles of "Maneuver Month," "Machine-gun Month," and "Mud Month" and during which the art of cussing, built upon a good solid Missouri foundation, attained such a degree of development as to dwarf and render endurable the very miseries which gave it birth. And finally when one of our sergeants dove into the canal, containing fully five feet of water, to rescue a stone, which he had carelessly mistaken for a comrade, nothing but humor can explain his coming out again with both his overseas cap and his temper.

As its company commander I can only say that the memory of "L" Company will always remain my greatest source, both of amusement and of pride.

COMPANY "M"

Company "M"

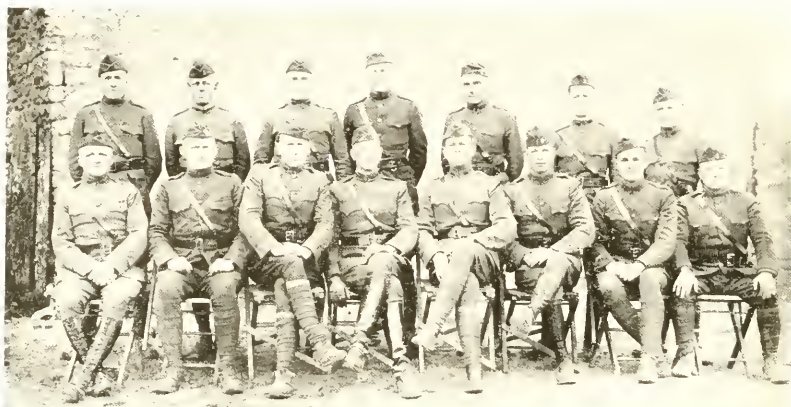

TO recount the history of Company "M" would take a book in itself let alone a few words to accompany its picture in this memorial of the deeds of the regiment. At this day—when we are about to return to the old haunts again—let us not forget the glorious days we had as Company "M." Let us all be as proud in days to come as we have been in days gone by when we told those who asked, "Company M, 351st, sir." From the days at Dodge to these days at St. Nazaire, the regiment has looked to "M" for its morale—for it was in "M" that spirits were highest. Company "M" was ever ready; when the time came to take over a sector of the front line, Company "M" did it with half a company; it was Company "M" who took the first German blow, the first to report battle deaths. And in the never-forgettable hikes through the mud and rain, Company "M" came through as they started out. Let us remember those hardships, let us tackle those minor ones in life with the same "go-get-'em" spirit. Let us not forget the graves at Hericourt and Hagenbach.

Keep the morale as high as it was in the days of September and October, 1918.

OFFICERS, COMPANY "M"

351 ST. INFANTRY

MAJOR EVANS AND HIS OFFICERS

MAJOR BLANDING AND 2ND BATTALION HEADQUARTERS

351 ST. INFANTRY

The Second Battallion 351st. Infantry

(Somewhere in France)

About the year two thousand and eight,
By some peculiar stroke of fate,
An Officer strolled on the "Mud-lined" street,
His O. D. suit was worn, but neat.

His step was faltering, but his eye was bright,
His beard was long, and snowy white,
The season of life for him was late,
On his arm the emblem of the 88th.

He tottered up to the Old Marie,
To see if the Fates by chance did decree
That the 88th be ordered Home,
That he might die, and no longer roam.

He entered the building, but returned "Toot-Sweet"
The weight of years seemed in his feet,
He brushed a tear from his old blue eye,
Shrugged his shoulders, and heaved a sigh.

He walked to the corner, where he saw standing
His battalion commander, The Major Blanding.
He was old and worn, and his back was bent,
The result of the life in the Army he'd spent.

The Major sighed as the old man came near,
"Good morning, Cap. Logan, what news do you hear?"
The Captain straightened as best he could,
Saluted and said, "None, would God I would."

The Major smiled, and said, "I'm sorry,"
Let's forget about Home and find Cap. Corey.
They went to the Club for the Halt and the Lame,
And with checkers they started a sociable game.

They played for an hour, both did lose and did win,
When the door creaked open and Cap. Corey came in.
His hair was white, his back was bent,
From a life of toil, or a life misspent.

"Bon-jour," my comrades, your pardon I beg,
Have you seen the old Captain, Sir Frederick Legg?"
"Not today," said the Major, "take a chair if you choose."
We'll start a small game, as a cure for our blues."

They started a game at a centime a point,
When in came Cap. Legg with a creak in each joint.
"As you were," he cried as he dropped in a chair,
And ran his slim fingers through his snow white hair.

"I say, Old Pals, this life is a killer,
Where the Hell, do you spose is old Cap. Miller?"

"I don't know," said the Major, "but I venture a guess,
You'll find him not far from the Officer's Mess."

"Quite right," croaked Cap. Logan, "It might be the mess,
But I'll wager a pfennig, he's nearer a dress."
So they dealt the cards for a four-handed game,
Did these four old sports of the 88 name.

So the game wore on, few words did they speak,
When again the door opened, with a groan and a creak.
The room was as quiet as death, perhaps stiller,
And there in the door stood old Captain Miller.

He too, was old and stiff and bent,
And at once to his feelings did he give vent:
"Greetings, old pals, how goes the battle?
I've got a rumor, and it's not more prattle."

"Give me your ear, and cease that cursing,
The Division just received a cable from Pershing.
That if France is cleaned up and Belgium rebuilt,
And we are dead sure there's no more blood to be spilt,

To eat our old horses, and tear down our shacks,
Police up our grounds, and sling our old packs.
Then march across France, to the nearest port,
And camp for six months, in a tumble-down fort;
At the end of which time, if a 'tramp' he can hail,
He'll dicker with Congress, and tell us to sail."

The Officers all rose and with a mighty yell,
Said "Miller, we believe you, we do 'like hell'."
Then they ordered the cognac, a plenty for the gang,
And all the songs of the 88th sang.

They romped like colts till the break of day,
Then the Major rose and to his pals did say,
"The rumor is true, it is a fact."

After eighty-nine years, we're ordered back,
But with your permission, by heck, if able,
I'll send General Jack, the following cable:—

"Our wives are dead, our children gone,
And we have naught, but a suit to pawn;
We've forgotten the language of the U. S. A.
Then again, perhaps, we'd be in the way,
So we prefer, if indeed we may,
To be mustered out here, and in France to stay."

So on the 88th's record on History's page,
Wrote:—"Sent to France and died of old age."

Reveille is Blown

WHEN war, armies, registration and a few other predominant questions of the time were decided in Congress in 1917, and the then called National Army finally got under way, it was Des Moines, a fair city near the center of Iowa, which became one of the great Yank meccas in the United States. It was in June of that year that the site was selected and the construction work started on what became known as Camp Dodge. Camp Dodge owed its selection almost wholly to its geographical location. It was centrally located with regard to Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri—states which furnished men to make up the Division which was trained at that point.

WHERE DUST WAS KING

Before the dust of the cornfields on which the camp was situated was given time to settle and cake, and before the two-story frame buildings were all completed, the first of the new army began to arrive—first, officers from the regular service and the training camps and a few days later the cosmopolitan gathering which was eager to assimilate the intricacies of the "Infantry Drill," get uniforms and be soldiers.

On the 29th of August, 1917, the 88th Division sprang, full grown into being, and by September 3rd, the preliminary work of organization had been completed, and the Division was ready to receive its quota of the men of the north and central west. Major General E. H. Plummer was assigned to command the Division. Brigadier General William D. Beach was assigned to the 176th Brigade, and Colonel Herbert B. Crosby to the 351st Infantry. Shortly after the organization of the Division, the regiment was organized, and officers were assigned as follows:

REGIMENTAL HEADQUARTERS—DODGE

Three days later, September 6th, the men began to arrive, five per cent reporting September 6th, forty per cent came two weeks later, and by September 21st, the regiment was assuming proportions, and the work of whipping the machine into shape began. The regiment was made up of men coming from the four northwest counties of Iowa,

351 ST. INFANTRY

and that part of Minnesota, including the city of St. Paul, that lies south of the Minnesota River. A cosmopolitan crowd, whose first question was one of something to eat and a uniform, and whose real trouble was to determine whether or not salutes were in order, and if they were how to do it. At that time the plumbing system of the camp wasn't running as serenely as it might have, and there was a unanimous verdict that the government had picked out the hottest and dustiest place in America for a camp, and getting dirt out of ears was the most perplexing job the new soldier had.

Getting Ready

After a week, everybody had a campaign hat, O. D. shirt, belt and russet shoes, issue, and the company streets became active with squads righting, and parade resting—without arms. Ambitious candidates for corporals' jobs spent long hours at night with the I. D. R., and next day wondered what command it took to make some ordinary private face about; but by the middle of October sergeants' and corporals' chevrons were being sported—old issue "Krage" were doing duty at "present" and "port arms," and the regiment was beginning to wonder if it was ever to be sent overseas. By this time leggins, breeches, O. D. and blouses had been signed for.

COMPANY 'A' LEAVES FOOTBALL

Then in late October the 34th Division at Camp Cody and the 35th Division at Camp Doniphan sent out a call and 500 men of the regiment were sent. The squads were broken up a bit, the company lines made a trifle shorter, but the work went on until November 20th, when 1500 men were sent to Camp Pike to the 87th Division, leaving from 12 to 18 non-commissioned officers, including the 1st sergeant, in each company. Winter was on—coal had to be gotten, K. P. to be done, and no privates—so from the old-time 1st sergeant to the youngest corporal in the outfit, everybody sailed in and from handling coal, doing K. P., keeping the fires going, doing two on, four off, and later, when the thermometer got down to 20 below—the running guard—to making out fatigue details in the orderly room, with an occasional Saturday night in Des Moines—the winter was passed until February. Then the non-coms began to press up the O. D., hitch up their belts and snap into things a little more soldierly—for the new men were coming in. The regiment received its quota—only to lose them again in March when they, with a large number of the old non-commissioned officers, were sent overseas. Again in March and April men came in—only to go on.

SMALL BOAT

It was at this time that Major Prunty was called from the regiment to duties in Washington. The men of the regiment reluctantly saw Major Prunty leave—for he was the friend of all—and the impression he made remained with the regiment throughout its existence.

Port of Embarkation

In May, Missouri and Kansas sent their contingent to Dodge and by the sound of the schedule and the intensity of the work everybody sensed that:—"Well, we're on our way for sure." Reveille came before sun-up and taps long after dark and the drill field, rifle range and gas house were working overtime. Equipment came—and was issued—and inspections were made to see that none was lost. If it was, less pay next month. Records were brought up to date; officers and non-commissioned officers worked all day and smoked and worked and cussed half the night. Then, in late July, entraining orders for a place only the War Department knew, came. On the 5th of August Company M, the last company of the regiment to leave, got aboard, were pulled out on to the main line, and woke up the next morning in Indiana—headed for the coast.

Three days later the regiment was again assembled in tents at Camp Mills, L. I., where the final inspections were passed and the last wind and rainstorm experienced, and the peaked fedora campaign hat swapped for "Old Rain-in-the-face." On the morning of the 16th the ride to the docks was taken, the "latest" passenger list dug up, and the single file up the plank begun. After that—the assignment to a hammock, issue of a life-belt, a speedy inspection of H. M. S. something or other, and then to the decks to kid some M. P. who wasn't going along.

Lt. Col. McKinley was lost to the regiment shortly before it sailed—and the regiment lost another friend who is remembered by those who knew him.

When the steamships Saxon, Scotian and Ulysses left their docks at Hoboken at 12:55 p. m., carrying 3500 American soldiers of the regiment, and poked their bows, covered with cheering France-bound warriors, down the river and toward open sea, the regiment bade goodbye to the sun-swept shores of America.

Looking for the Worst

To the bulk of those aboard, the trip so far had been a sight-seeing expedition, for all were westerners and not all had had an opportunity of visiting the East. So, after the transports had pushed off, got under their own steam and joined the convoy, aft and mid decks were crowded, for the New York skyline and the Statue were becoming dimmer with every turn of the propeller, and shortly memories alone remained. Sixteen transports were in the convoy along with the cruiser St. Louis and some destroyers. The first day a sea-plane and dirigible escorted the convoy, as the waters outside the harbor were sub-infested, there being a ship sunk there the day before.

The sea was unusually quiet and aside from the zigzag course that was being taken, lifeboat drill, trying to make the inner man keep quiet on British rations, and the usual stand of guards, there was nothing unusual in the trip—until the night when an iceberg was sighted and all the artillery in the world took a shot at it. A northerly course had been taken and the fogs of Newfoundland and chilly weather were encountered. After eleven days news leaked around that we were getting into the Irish waters and where the U-boats were particularly active. The boat crews said that at eight next morning the mosquito fleet would "pick us up," and promptly at eight that morning specks appeared all about the convoy through the mist, and ten minutes later a fleet of British destroyers were playing hide and seek around and among the boats of the convoy. At nine that morning trouble started—something had been discovered by H34—who promptly dropped a depth charge. The convoy avoided the H34 and the circle she was cutting around a particular spot on the sea, and nobody saw what really was happening, and nobody ever found out, yet in an hour the H34 came rolling along and joined the others.

Europe

Anchor was dropped the night of August 27th and on the morning of the 28th packs were rolled, hard tack and willie issued, the companies assembled and roll called and all lined up for disembarking. Once ashore, legs were tested and the absence of the "sailor's roll" or "sea legs" was a disappointment. Then somebody asked a British woman where we were and the word "Liverpool" went down the line. After a short rest at docks, the command to fall in was given, everybody counted off, did squads right, and started for the train sheds. The first call down in England came from a British cop who told the leading company to get over on the left side of the street. Travel was made in third-class English coaches—a striking contrast to the American means of travel. Yet this inconvenience was made light of. The regiment was fortunate in being able to travel across the Island during daylight, and England at that season was, as one buck in Company B said: "Gawd-amighty, they've just mowed the grass, and sprinkled the lawn." Late in the afternoon the regiment arrived at Brookwood, a suburb of London, in the Aldershot Training Area. Billets were in tents and Stoney Castle the name of the camp. The Third Battalion was stationed at Cowshott, an auxiliary of Stoney Castle. During the four days the regiment was in the area, many acquaintances with the British, and with the Australians in particular, were made. The "Hi, there, Yaynk, hoos yer lidy friend?" of the Australians remains one of the cheerful memories of the war, for the Australian, as he was seen, was an American with a funny dialect.

At six-thirty the morning of September 3rd packs were rolled and the regiment entrained at Brookwood, leaving the train at ten-thirty a. m. at the docks of Southampton. Transportation failed to appear and the regiment hiked to Camp Church on the outskirts of Southampton, where billets in barracks were drawn. It was here that men of the regiment became rather well acquainted with the British young woman, for some enterprising private in the Headquarters Company found out that the old time kissing games were quite the rage in England; so, while the Welch Guards' Band furnished the music, a good many of the benedicts of the regiment established a rather enviable reputation.

France

On the evening of September 5th the regiment got aboard several small boats and started across the Channel. More real sea was experienced in those twelve hours than had been experienced in the previous twelve days, and not a few spent their time in feeding their piscatorial pals. However, daylight brought the cherished sight of the shores of France it also brought the rain with which the regiment was to become so familiar. A hike to another rest camp was made where the night was spent and the next afternoon brought another hike and our first introduction to the French Premier Class of traveling - box cars, 10 hommes or 8 chevaux. For scarcity of room and rough riding qualities, the 40 hommes and "Wheel" chevaux certainly outranked the English coaches.

351 ST. INFANTRY

Flavigny

Two days later the trains were vacated at Les Laumes and Pouillenay, Cote d'Or, and the regiment scattered in a number of small villages with regimental headquarters at Flavigny.

Flavigny proved to be one of the most picturesque spots the regiment struck while in France. The steep hill leading to the city, when negotiated under heavy packs, brought out all of the choice epithets of the American tongue and the all-around conviction that this hill was steeper and longer than any one of the Rockies could ever be. But, when the entrance was reached, a big red, white and blue banner with "France and America Forever" in English on it, stared everybody in the face and all along the line backs straightened out, rifles were brought up and legs snapped out a little more gingerly, for this seemed like those last days at home. American and French flags were out, and the mayor and other distinguished gentlemen of the town, looking for all the world like our own senators back home, were out with a hearty handshake to greet the regiment. The official welcome given the regiment, the first American troops to arrive in this part of France, was whole hearted and mighty impressive. But the welcome didn't end there. While the men were being shown their billets, and afterwards, these folk could not do enough. Their first cries of "Vive l'Americain, vive l'Americain" lingered and when billets were reached, luxuries such as eggs and milk, which had not been seen in some time, came out from somewhere. The barn billets in Cote d'Or seemed less damp and more cheerful than those of other places to come.

After having been squared away, and taking a hasty look at the surroundings, the men were invited in to "break wine," so to speak, with the inhabitants. There wasn't any "parleying" for outside of "pas compris" the bulk of the regiment were as newborns in conversation. The only really busy man in the company was the fellow who could get away with the talk.

The cordiality of the reception and the hospitality of the hosts more than made up for the corned willie and hardtack that were the rations, and the days without smokes.

LES HOMES TO HOME

UNDER FIRE FROM BOTH SIDES—NO MAN SLAYED

Champey and Hericourt

Four days later came orders to roll 'em up and hike. Les Laumes was the entraining point. Not a few of the people of the villages about Flavigny went down to Les Laumes that afternoon, for these Americans were surely going to the front. News came early that day that the American army had made a drive—later the news-papers confirmed the fact that the St. Mihiel salient was being wiped out. The regiment hoped that St. Mihiel was the detraining point, and rumor insisted that it was. But after 60 hours, Hericourt was reached, and the regiment again scattered in villages, with headquarters at Champey. The 1st Battalion went to Coisevaux and the 3rd Battalion was at Verlains and Byans. Gas masks and tin hats were handed around the second day, and a few days later, the first detachment of officers and men were sent up to relieve parts of the 29th Division who were holding the front line in Alsace.

The first day in this area gave everybody to understand that we were near the front, for a grumbling was audible at times, and lively scraps between the French anti-aircraft and the German plane were daily occurrences. The first thrill came with the first air raid, when the Germans dropped bombs on Hericourt and vicinity one night, illuminating the landscape and inflicting casualties on some other units of the Division.

The "Flu"

Then officers of the regiment returned who had been on reconnaissance at St. Mihiel and in the sector in Alsace, yarns were told, rumors spread and everybody itched to get up and get some first-hand information.

At this stage, the advance party, which had preceded the regiment to France, and had been attending schools, joined and assisted in putting the finishing touches on the training.

In this Champey area a most thorough acquaintance was made with one of the most famous of the institutions of France—the manure pile. Officers insisted they be removed, and inhabitants were just as insistent that they remain "put." The policing of the edges of those heaps was never finished and just as fast as the streets were swept and shined up, somebody drove over them with a load, and the same thing had to be done over again. The incessant rain and mud helped to make the days of those who were policing merrier, yet the work was done with cheerfulness—outside of the growling that is a religion with soldiers.

Up to this time Spanish Influenza was some new fangled word that meant nothing to the regiment. But in the Champey area it struck the regiment and strong, husky fellows who had never been on a sick report suffered as they never had. The men were sick—training delayed for at times as many as 50 per cent of the men in the companies were on sick report—with the "flu." During the epidemic the regiment was saddened by the loss of a number of its members. All that good comrades could do to alleviate the suffering was done; men and officers drilled and trained in the rain all day and hustled dainties and comforts for the sick during the night. The medical staff never slept and it was due to their vigilance and never-tiring energies that 95 per cent of those sick are healthy men today.

In Action

Then the "flu" began to wane, and during the first days in October orders came that the regiment would take over a sector from the French, and to get up where the fighting was "toot sweet." Packs were rolled, ammunition issued, dog tags inspected, and on the 4th of October everybody except the town majors and those still weak from the "flu" started on that 50 kilometer hike through the foothills of the Vosges. The first stop was at Tretrudans, near the Swiss border, reached at two o'clock in the morning. The daylight hours were spent in sleeping and nursing lame shoulders and sore feet, but at five that night, the columns re-assembled, did squads right, route step, and headed east. It was raining when the march started and continued long enough to add twenty pounds to the weight of packs, and make the going underfoot slippery and treacherous. Nothing was said—small men with packs as large as themselves hiked along and guyed some big "buck" who was growling because his "damned pack weighed a ton." Men kept in ranks that night—pride of organization would not permit anyone to fall out and have the ambulance bring the packs. In Company L one diminutive private, too dog tired to light a cigarette during the rests, suggested to "Davey," his bunkie: "Davey, I'm just too damned tired to put one in front of another any more, an' this pack's sure some hell."

"Most there now, Jimmy, and stick'er out ol' timer, for we'll get 'boo coo' sleep when we do get there. An' here, lemme carry your gat a spell. I ditched one of my blankets 'n my bully beef and my pack ain't as heavy as your'n. Wonder how much further this damn road runs."

Three hours later those same two, along with every other man who started in the column, were still in ranks and plugging along. Then a ripple went down the line for somebody said Germany and the Lieutenant confirmed it—we were in Germany. The next village settled it. The houses were different—the towns looked different, and the streets were wider. The grumbling of the guns to the east had changed to a rumble and a dull "boom," and the sky flashed red. The lines were off there—just a bit, and a moment later, the star shells could be seen. Then a part of the regiment broke off from the column, during a rest, and the Machine Gun Company pulled by. The sight of those machine gunners, laboring under their packs and dragging their heavy carts and guns behind them, made the doughboy sit up and the grumbling about rifles and packs ceased; for these men, besides doing a soldier's work on a hike, were also doing the work of the mules that the regiment didn't have, and their cheerfulness and sassy repartee brought back the pep. The last stage of the journey for that night was at hand and a short while later, Dannemarie, Manspach and Gommersdorf were bustling places—for soldiers were looking for their billets. By five o'clock that morning everybody was hitting the hay, some with clothes still on, but getting the "boo coo" sleep "Davey" was telling about. Next noon every top sergeant in the regiment was telling the captain: "This company has certainly got the guts, Cap'n, nary a man fell out."

The regiment was at the front, just a few kilometers back. The artillery firing was no longer the rumble and grumble—it spoke in sharp tones and cracked viciously.

The first baptism of fire for the entire regiment came that morning at about eight o'clock. The Germans were raiding the front line, and the artillery was deafening. At that time everybody sort of set himself, getting ready for anything that might happen to come over, but after an hour or so, the intensity of the fire died down and went back to normal.

During the raid enemy reconnaissance by airplane was particularly active, and a beautiful scrap between eight French and German planes took place. The Germans did not get back over the billets where the regiment was located. One plane succeeded in sneaking away from the party, but was promptly headed back by anti-aircraft fire.

That morning regimental headquarters, which had been established at Manspach, called in the officers of Companies B, C, I and K and told them to make ready to take over the sector that night. Orders were to get up to Hagenbach and Badricourt, headquarters of the 3rd and 1st Battalions, and make a daylight reconnaissance of the sector. That being done, be ready to take the platoons in that night.

At four o'clock that afternoon the companies selected to do the first hitch started out in columns of twos. Then they split into columns of files, one file on each side of the road, keeping well alongside the camouflage to escape observation by the enemy planes. The 1st Battalion companies went into the Carspach woods and the 3rd Battalion into the Schonholz woods. Major Evans commanded the 1st Battalion and Captain Burnham the 3rd.

While the regiment was back at Champey the Intelligence platoons had been formed under Captain H. G. Carpenter. The 1st Battalion was under Lt. Rowland, the 2nd under Lt. Eckerman and the 3rd under

Lt. Murphy. A stiff two weeks' training course was spent at Vyans and at the time the regiment was ready to take over its sector, the Intelligence section, with its scouts, observers and snipers, was ready to do its work. They had preceded the regiment into the sector by three days and were ready to tell what to do and how to do it.

The advance party was in the lines, and had been for two weeks, and their assistance for the first few days was invaluable to the other men. They had been on patrols, had been in raids, and were ready with the assistance that was needed.

On the night of October 7th, after the platoons had reached their respective battalion headquarters, they were taken charge of by their officers and the march through the woods and up the communicating trenches begun. The support lines were passed and by nine o'clock the platoon P. C's. reached. At this point the men of the regiment stood their second baptism of fire, for while the men were outside, waiting for guides to take them to their respective posts in the front lines, a short bombardment of the lines was made by the Germans. No casualties were inflicted. The rifle fire, the Very lights and the incessant pop-popping of the machine guns brought war closer now than it had ever been.

The relief was made without trouble, and by eleven o'clock word had been sent back that everything was O. K. in the lines and that the regiment was ready for any party that might be called for. During that night nobody slept.

The French, with whom the regiment was brigaded, were on the alert, looking for something to pop, for as the regiment later came to know, it certainly would not have taken an expert to know that there were greenhorns in the outposts. Considerable ammunition was expended that night with no visible results. About two o'clock the next morning a red rocket shot up from the sector down the line, and the warning went up the lines, and gas masks donned. After thirty minutes and no gas, everybody rested easily again. Morning broke and a hasty inspection of the trenches made.

The sector was the southern subsector of the center sector Haute-Alsace—a sector that had been the scene of much vicious fighting. The once heavy forest was a mass of debris. Few trees were standing and the trenches had been pummelled by constant artillery fire until shallow ditches were all that remained. Acres of barbed wire and shell holes stretched out to the front—and over across the way—about 1000 yards was a line—the German front line. So this was "No-Man's" land.

The French who were with the regiment were the 4th Zouaves, one of the most famous of all the French. Wearing seven citations, it was the proud record of the Zouaves that they had never been defeated. In before Verdun four times, and in all of the great battles of the war, these troops were the cream of the French so-called "shock troops." Their daring and boldness were admired, and a few days later the regiment learned from them how successful patrols and raids were carried out.

EQUIPMENT "C"

The first-line companies were in for four days and then relieved. Companies "A" and "D" took over the sectors of "B" and "C," and Companies "I" and "M" relieved "J" and "K," while those who had been up front moved back into support. The first night after the relief had been made, the Germans opened up on Eglingen, a small town within the American lines, and an intense bombardment of two hours' duration was laid down, Company "M" receiving the brunt of the trouble. Over 1600 high explosive shells dropped in the sector and at this time the regiment sent back the first names "Killed in Action." A gas attack was launched at the same time, affecting the entire front.

They were putting on a big party up to the left, across the canal, for the air was charged with something that night that told there was a battle on. The front lines were destroyed, the men placed themselves at the points of resistance and with gas masks on, opened up a fire over to the left. The lieutenant got word from somewhere that fire in that direction would help. The machine gun outfit was sending it in as fast as the guns would fire, and the Germans were coming back with machine gun, rifle and grenade, as well as intense artillery fire. The vicious whip and roar of the H. E. shell made its impression that night, and cultivated a wholesome respect.

But two men in the regiment were caught when the gas came over. The red sheet of flame announced the coming of the projectors, and masks were put on and kept on. After the fight satisfaction was felt that the regiment had stood its first attack. The men were veterans, each knew what to do and did it. No longer recruits, but fighting soldiers with a definite purpose in mind. This fact was brought out by men of the Headquarters Company, who stuck with the game, who worked their instruments until the shell fire destroyed the wire, and then got out and repaired the breaks; by men of the medical detachment who got on the job and did their part in the front lines; by all men of the regiment who got down to business and said to themselves: "Let her come." Eglingen, a name that will bring back memories as long as men of the regiment and division live.

Two nights later another raid was made on the lines, this time Company "A" taking the medicine. After a short but intense artillery preparation, about forty Germans came over, but were promptly driven out. The attack was made in the Stockette Woods, but results were nil. The following night the 1st Battalion again had their little party, this time Company "C," who had come into the lines for a second session, having the show. A German raid was made on one of the outposts, but the Americans had "parteed." The post raided was occupied during the day time only, so after a fine artillery preparation, over came Jerry. He was given a cordial reception by the other posts, but found the post being raided, empty.

Companies "B," "C," "I," "K," "L" and "M" were again in line. On the 18th of October at 11:15 a. m., during a fog, the Germans came over in force on the Schonholz sector. Shortly before the raiding party reached the lines, the fog raised and they were discovered. Fire was opened immediately, the Machine Gun Company getting in particularly effective work. Upon being discovered, a barrage of 77's, 105's and 155's, along with machine gun fire was laid. A hand-to-hand fight with grenades and rifles took place, the Germans retiring after a short time.

THEY HAD THE WRONG IDEA

ALONG THE CANAL

The 2nd Battalion, under Major Robinson, had been held in reserve at Romagny up until October 15th, when they were ordered into the lines in the Fulleren sector. Companies "F" and "G" were in for the first hitch. Companies of the 2nd Battalion took their first shell fire when coming up, for at that time, the roads behind were given a hard shelling. Immediately upon their arrival in the line, they became active with patrols, and under the able tutorage of the French Zouaves, soon became proficient in the "hit and get away quick" stuff.

On October 17th, the French turned over the sector to the regiment, and from that time on until October 25th, the regiment was "on its own." The regiment became particularly active with patrols and raids, being out every night on reconnaissance and fighting missions. It was while on patrol duty that Lt. Mathew D. Eckerman, Intelligence officer of the 2nd Battalion, was killed. On October 25th the 352nd came up and took over the sector, the 351st moving back into reserve.

During its stay in the lines, the regiment found the lack of transportation rather serious. The entire division of 28,000 men had one motor truck with which to keep up provisions, so delicacies were left out. Corned beef and hard bread, washed down with a good hot shot of coffee, is good grub when men are hungry.

When the regiment left the trenches, Companies "I" and "A" remained with the 352nd, and after a gruelling hike in the ever incessant rain, went into billets in the Montreau Chateau area. Camp Norman and Lutran were occupied by the battalions. It was here that training was resumed and preparations made for the big push to come later.

On the night of October 31st, the longest and hardest march up to this time was taken. The regiment moved into the Belfort area. Regimental headquarters was at Errevette, the 3rd Battalion and Machine Gun Company at Evette, the 1st Battalion at Sermangny and the 2nd Battalion at Chaux. The 2nd Battalion during its stay in the lines lost Major Robinson, who was sent to America to instruct, and Captain Blanding, Company "C," who had been promoted to Major, took his place. The 3rd Battalion, while still at Hericourt, lost Major Fulton, who was promoted and returned to the States, and the Battalion and regiment lost another of its best soldiers and friends.

It was at Errevette that Companies "A" and "I" rejoined the regiment, after twenty hours of continuous hiking under heavy packs. Over fifty kilometers were made in the hike, the hardest and longest of any made in the regiment. Here the first news came that an armistice was being considered, yet at that time, little faith was taken in the rumors. The Argonne fight was on and indications pointed to the Division being sent up.

Finée le Guerre

Accordingly, on November 9th, orders came to get out of the Belfort area and on that date and the next, the regiment got aboard the train and unloaded at Alrainville, north of Toul, and in the Metz sector. Rumor insisted that an armistice was due that date, November 11th, but the 3rd Battalion, which had disembarked that morning, started its march to the front. The remainder of the regiment had not yet arrived. At 11 o'clock, that date, the terrific bombardment which was in progress abruptly came to an end, and to those still aboard the train, the rattle of the wheels on the rails seemed mighty loud. Then the church bells started and in every town passed the bells were ringing. The French Liaison officer with the regiment, Lt. LeGreze, believed nothing he read or heard, but at the sound of the bells, he announced that the guerre was "finée."

To those on the hike to the front, the cessation of the guns had a singular effect.

SNIPERS—2ND BATTALION

It wasn't possible, this peace business, but what in thunder did it mean? Finally a car drove by and a beaming faced major leaned out and shouted: "She's finée."

"It is like hell," some hard-boiled buck in "M" Company retorted, "Just wait another five minutes."

Then, at the end of an hour, with no more firing, it became a fact that there would be no more. It affected the feeling of different men in various ways, but the general opinion was expressed by a tough little Missourian in "K" Company, who merely said as he adjusted his pack: "Well, I'll be damned."

The regiment moved into billets at Villet St. Etienne, Jaillon and Francheville,

It became evident that the regiment had been beaten to the big push by the armistice and the general opinion was confirmed later by an article in the "Stars and Stripes," which was headed: "Seven American Divisions Called for Metz Attack," and which stated: "Further light was thrown this week on the great unfought battle of the war, the allied offensive of November 14th, in Lorraine which would have forced the evacuation of Metz, and to avoid which the German General Staff put up its hands. Against these and nineteen French divisions the Germans had just four available, and two of these were of poor grade.

Beginning with November 12th, training was resumed and the regiment kept up in fighting trim ready for any eventuality.

A short while later the theatrical talent of the regiment was assembled, given a short period of training, and in a small oranges and ingredients for pie. The fact that an order to salvage the surrounding territory on that date, did not spoil anybody's dinner.

Then came orders to clear the area. Nobody said where the destination was—it was taken for granted that the regiment was going towards the coast. So with a yell and a song, packs were slung and the hike back started. The sun was out that day.

Three days of hard going in full equipment brought the regiment to the Gondrecourt area. Stops enroute had been made at Pagny-sur-Meuse and vicinity on the first night and at Rigny-la-Salle the second. The third night found the regiment at Houelaincourt, Meuse, and billets were drawn. Company "M," Machine Gun Company and the Supply Company went over to Baulignecourt. The regiment arrived on December 1st and settled down to a period of training and rain. The weather was miserable, but by Christmas time the first month of the training schedule had been completed, and the week holiday granted at Christmas was a rest period that was used to the best advantage.

Company "F" of the regiment did not remain in Houelaincourt long enough to shake hands with the town and get acquainted. Before all of the regiment had been assembled, they were on their way to Liffol-le-Grand, where they were to do convoy duty on ration trains going into Germany. After the first of the year, Companies "L," "G" and "H" and 2nd Battalion headquarters followed suit, and Liffol-le-Grand became a regimental town.

Then the Machine Gun Company and Company "M" moved into Houdelaincourt. The 3rd Battalion settled down in the camp "across the canal," while the remainder of the regiment took billets throughout the town. Training and maneuvers kept the command engaged until During January the entertainers consolidated with a part of the band and went on the road as the "Khaki Karnival Ko." The second army area was toured and a decided hit scored. A hangar was erected in the area, and shows became nightly affairs, all very much appreciated by the soldier audiences. In March a second entertainment group was organized and became known as the "Big Four Minstrels." After their initial success at home, they too hit the road, traveling via truck.

During the while, construction had been going on, and by the middle of March barracks had been erected to house the Machine Gun Company, and Companies "C" and "D" of the 1st Battalion. At this time the Sergeants' Club was brought about—the only one the regiment had ever had—and was a decided success from the beginning. An Officers' Club was likewise started at the same time.

During the winter news came down through channels that we would take part in a Horse Show. The Supply Company got busy, dug up the animals, policed and dressed them up, and got things ready for the Brigade Show. Here the "Booby" was lost—and with the "Booby" went a feeling of satisfaction that was never expressed for fear of having him recalled. The regiment was a runner up in the Division Show, taking second place, and was one of the greater factors in putting the Division in second place in the Corps Show.

General Pershing reviewed the Division on April 19th and the regiment came home from the inspection and review with keen feelings of satisfaction, and with the regimental colors flying a streamer decorated for our participation in action with the enemy—center sector, Haute-Alsace, Oct. 17, 1918 to Nov. 4, 1918.

Then in April came orders for the "Enlisted Man's Show," and the regiment went at it with the same fight and spirit that have characterized all of its actions. After a systematic period of training, the regiment appeared on the grounds at Gondrecourt and that evening men were demanding salutes from other divisional organizations, for the 351st had "cleaned up."

Then orders came to get ready for the coast.

A sort of tension hung in the air, and then came orders to abolish training and to fill up the trenches in the sector. The work was done with a degree of cheerfulness seldom exhibited by soldiers detailed on "fatigue." The engineer major said that it would be "home, toot-sweet" when that trench system was filled to his satisfaction. Long Houdelaincourt became French again. For over two years, it had been the center of American activity, having had within its borders elements of the 1st, 3rd, 42nd 28th and 88th Divisions, besides the thousands of other units who merely stopped for the night, staging it to the front.

But on the Sunday following the departure of Companies "E" and "F" of the regiment, Houdelaincourt became the tranquil old spot it had been for centuries. To those

As seen from the eyes of the homeward-bound Yank, Noyon was the bright spot of France. Yet at Noyon four days of hustle and hurry were spent. Final checks and inspections were passed.

At the time St. Nazaire was reached the regiment was asked if it could get ready in fifteen hours. It shouted its affirmation, and every man dug in with both toes. By one o'clock next morning the report was sent in that all men had been de-loused for the last time, inspected and francs changed for dollars. At seven that morning, May 20th, companies fell in for what proved to be the last hike in full equipment. Yet those packs weighed less that morning than ever before.

Down at the docks a welcome sight awaited hungry eyes. Her heavenly majesty, the "Mercury," lie at her berth with her gang plank reaching out to greet those joyous feet. "Right by files" was the command and up the line went. No more snappy salutes were ever given an officer as he called out "Crockett!" and the sharp answer, "Davey, sub," and three thousand other names that day.

The "Mercury" called her tugs to her side at 4:15 p. m., and started out to sea. There was little cheering, as she left her docks, for this was the hour the regiment had awaited for months, and thoughts were not of the fact that the regiment was leaving, but of the fact that soon we would be home.

An hour or so later, the "Mercury" was well out into the Bay of Biscay.

Rough sea was encountered the first few days and there was much sickness, but by the time mid-ocean was reached the sickness passed, and the days were made lively by sports aboard and concerts by the band and the entertainers. The "blue denims" came in for their share of fun.

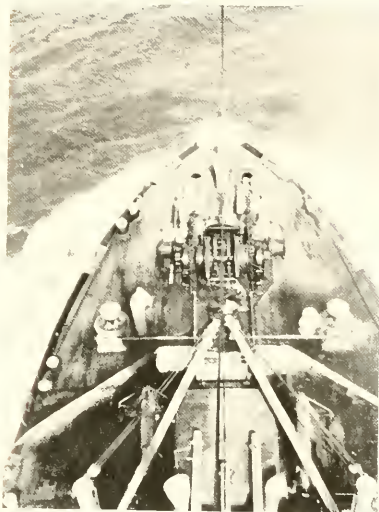

After eleven days, on June 1st, some watchful private up on the bow threw his overseas cap into the ocean and yelled out "There she is! Oh, boy!"

Five minutes later the sandy cliffs about Cape Charles hove into view. The band hit up the music, but was soon drowned by the uproar. The "Mercury" steamed up Hampton Roads, where the Atlantic Fleet was lying at anchor. The Pennsylvania, Delaware and Utah were saluted, and saluted in return. Then, at Newport News, the "Mercury" steamed into her berth, with everybody anxious and ready to "Boy, Howdy" American soil again.

Little trouble came of disembarking. Companies were lined up, packs were thrown into trucks, and the march to camp Morrison was started.

That night was spent in American cots, real beds, the first in a year. Next morning new equipment was issued, and final check made. Then companies were split up into detachments for the different camps, with the majority going to Dodge. American sleepers, a rare treat after the "40 Homme or 8 Cheveaux" type, were the order.

At Des Moines where the bulk of the regiment was demobilized, a parade was given. That afternoon a large part of the men had their discharge, $60 bonus and ticket home. The exit was quiet. No one wanted to see his buddy. So came to an end an organization second to none the army produced.

The regiment had finished its service; it closed its career as a unit of a famous army with the keen satisfaction that comes of a great work ably performed. The months in France were burdened with the hardships of life in battle, in campaigns and in camp. The life on foreign soil was punctuated brightly with pleasant memories of days spent at Nice and in other leave areas; it has been saddened by the loss of those great souls who answered the call and sleep beneath the soil they defended. Men of the regiment gave up all personal regard of ambition and fortune; they were burdened with toil and danger, and hunger in body, mind and heart. But

March on, Americans.”
